
Daniel Flemes is a political scientist specializing in International Relations and Latin America. He is a senior researcher at the GIGA German Institute of Global and Area Studies and member of the Regional Powers Network (RPN). His research interests include regional powers (Brazil, India, South Africa) in regional and global affairs, security and defense politics, civil-military relations and transnational threats in Latin America. Topically relevant publications include 'Regional Power South Africa: Co-operative Hegemony Constrained by Historical Legacy', in: Journal of Contemporary African Studies, Volume 27, Number 2, 2009, pp. 153-178; 'Emerging Middle Powers’ Soft Balancing Strategy: State and Perspectives of the IBSA Dialogue Forum', GIGA Working Paper No 57, Hamburg 2007; 'Brazil’s cooperative leadership in Southern Latin America’s security policies', Berlin 2006.

Rosemary Foot is Professor of International Relations and the John Swire Senior Research Fellow in the International Relations of East Asia, St Antony’s College, University of Oxford where she teaches predominantly on the International Relations postgraduate programme. Foot is also an elected Fellow of the British Academy. Author of several books, these include two on US policy during the Korean War published as part of the series “Cornell Studies in Security Affairs”; The Practice of Power, on US-China relations published in 1995 with Oxford University Press (OUP); and in 2000 Rights Beyond Borders: the global community and the struggle over human rights in China (OUP). In 2004 she published a co-edited book, (with Barry Buzan) called Does China Matter? A Reassessment (Routledge). Other monographs have covered Human Rights and Counter-Terrorism in America’s Asia Policy as well as Framing Security Agendas: US Counter-terrorist Policies and Southeast Asian Responses. Her research interests cover the international relations of the Asia-Pacific, aspects of China’s foreign policy, as well as the relationship between human rights and human security policies in Asia and beyond. Currently she is working with a co-author on a book entitled, China, the United States and Global Order, forthcoming with Cambridge University Press.
Eugenio Vargas Garcia holds a PhD in History of International Relations from the University of Brasilia and teaches foreign policy at the Rio Branco Institute, the Brazilian diplomatic academy. Joined the foreign service in 1995 and worked at the Brazilian Embassies in London and Mexico City. He is currently an advisor at the Foreign Minister’s Office in Brasilia. Previous academic activities include secondments as visiting research associate at the Centre for Brazilian Studies, University of Oxford, and as a professor at the College of Latin American Studies, National Autonomous University of Mexico (UNAM). He has four books published and several articles in international affairs periodicals.

Evelyn Goh (MA, DPhil) is Reader in International Relations at Royal Holloway, University of London. Her research interests are East Asian security, Sino-American relations, and international relations theory. Her publications include Constructing the US Rapprochement with China, 1961-74 (New York and Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2004, 2009); Developing the Mekong: Regionalism and Regional Security in China-Southeast Asia Relations, Adelphi Paper No. 387 (London: International Institute for Strategic Studies, 2007); and ‘Great Powers and Hierarchical Order: Analyzing Southeast Asian Regional Security Strategies’, International Security Vol. 32, No.3 (Winter 2007/8). Previously, she was University Lecturer in International Relations and Fellow of St. Anne’s College, Oxford. She has also held an Assistant Professorship at the Rajaratnam School of International Studies in Singapore, and visiting positions at the Australian National University, Woodrow Wilson Center and East-West Center. She is currently working on two book projects on power in Asia, and has a contract from Oxford University Press to write a new International Relations textbook. She teaches various undergraduate and graduate courses in international relations, international history and security, and is the Director of Graduate Study.

Andrew Hurrell is Montague Burton Professor of International Relations at Oxford University and a Fellow of Balliol College, Oxford. His research interests cover theories of international relations, with particular reference to international law and institutions; theories of global and regional governance; and the history of thought on international relations. He also has a long-standing interest in Latin America and in the role of developing countries in international relations. He is currently working on emerging powers and global order, focusing on the policies of Brazil and India towards international institutions including in the areas of international trade, climate change, and nuclear proliferation. Recent publications include: On Global Order: Power, Values and the Constitution of International Society (2007); and ‘Hegemony, Liberalism and Global Order: What Space for Would-be Great Powers?’ International Affairs 82, 1 (January 2006): 1-19. Previous publications include:
G. John Ikenberry is the Albert G. Milbank Professor of Politics and International Affairs at Princeton University in the Department of Politics and the Woodrow Wilson School of Public and International Affairs. He is also a Global Eminence Scholar at Kyung Hee University. Professor Ikenberry is the author of After Victory: Institutions, Strategic Restraint, and the Rebuilding of Order after Major Wars (Princeton, 2001), which won the 2002 Schroeder-Jervis Award presented by the American Political Science Association for the best book in international history and politics. A collection of his essays, entitled Liberal Order and Imperial Ambition: American Power and International Order (Policy) appeared in 2006. He is also co-editor of End of the West?: Crisis and Change in Atlantic Order (Cornell 2008). Most recently, he is co-author of Crisis of American Foreign Policy: Wilsonianism in the 21st Century (Princeton 2009), which explores the Wilsonian legacy in contemporary American foreign policy. He is currently writing a book entitled Liberal Leviathan: The Origins, Crisis, and Transformation of the American System (Princeton, forthcoming). Professor Ikenberry is the co-director of the Princeton Project on National Security, and he is the co-author, along with Anne-Marie Slaughter, of the final report, Forging a World of Liberty Under Law. Professor Ikenberry is the author and editor of many other books, including State Power and the World Economy (Norton, 2002) with Joseph Grieco. He is also editor of American Unrivaled: The Future of the Balance of Power (Cornell, 2002) and co-edited The Nation State in Question (Princeton, 2003) which examines the changing capacities and roles of the modern state. He is also co-author with John A Hall of The State (Minnesota, 1989) which has been translated into several languages, including French, Spanish, and Japanese. He has also edited a volume, with Michael Doyle, on New Thinking in International Relations (Westview, 1997). He is co-editor with Michael Cox and Takashi Inoguchi of U.S. Democracy Promotion: Impulses, Strategies, and Impacts (Oxford, 2000) and co-editor with Michael Mastanduno of International Relations Theory and the Asia-Pacific (Columbia, 2003). He has published in all the major academic journals of international relations and written widely in policy journals. Among his many activities, Professor Ikenberry served as a member of an advisory group at the State Department in 2003-04 and was a member of the Council on Foreign Relations Task Force on U.S.-European relations, the so-called Kissinger-Summers commission. He is also a reviewer of books on political and legal affairs for Foreign Affairs.

Neil MacFarlane is Head of the Department of Politics and International Relations, and Lester B. Pearson Professor of International Relations, at the University of Oxford. He has written extensively on nationalism and national liberation, intervention, humanitarian action and its relationship to peacekeeping, the responses of states and international organizations to civil conflicts, and on state and system formation in the former Soviet Union. With Yuen Foong Khong, he recently completed a critical history of the concept of human security for the United Nations Intellectual History Project. His current research focuses on governance and security issues in the Caucasus and Central Asia, and on regional subsystem formation in the former Soviet Union. He is a member of the International Institute for Strategic Studies and the British International Studies Association, an associate of the Geneva Centre for Security Policy, an international fellow at the Centre for Social Sciences and Department of International Relations, Tbilisi State University (Georgia), and Visiting Professor at the College of Europe (Bruges).

Benjamin Miller is a member of the Department of International Relations, School of Political Sciences at the University of Haifa. He is the President of the Israeli Association for International Studies. Among his publications: When Opponents Cooperate: Great Power Conflict and Collaboration in World Politics (Ann Arbor, Michigan: The University of Michigan Press, 2nd ed., 2002) and States, Nations and Great Powers: The Sources of Regional War and Peace (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press—Cambridge Studies in International Relations, 2007). He also published numerous articles on international relations theory and international and regional security. In 2007-8 he was the Schustermann Visiting Professor at the University of Colorado, Boulder and in 2000-2002 a Visiting Professor at the Department of Political Science at Duke University. Before that he was a tenured member of the department of International Relations at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem. He received a Ph. D. from the University of California at Berkeley and he was a Research Fellow at Harvard, MIT and Princeton University.
Kalypso Nicolaïdis is Professor of International Relations and Director of the European Studies Centre at Oxford University. Before moving back to Europe, she was associate professor at the Kennedy School of Government, Harvard University. She has also held visiting professorships around Europe, including at the Ecole Nationale d'Administration in Paris, at the College of Europe in Bruges as the professorial chair on Visions of Europe and in Sciences-Po, Paris as Vincent Wright chair. She has served as policy advisor including to the Greek and Dutch governments as well as the EU commission, the OECD and UNCTAD. She is currently a member of the EU reflection group chaired by Felipe Gonzales. Her publications appear in numerous journals including Foreign Affairs, Foreign Policy, the Journal of Common Market Studies, Politique Etrangere and Raison Publique More information can be found on her website: http://www.sant.ox.ac.uk/esc/knicolaidis/

Detlef Nolte is the Vice-President of the GIGA German Institute of Global and Area Studies, Director of the GIGA Institute Latin American Studies, Professor of Political Science (International Relations) and in the Area of Latin American Studies, University of Hamburg and a member of the executive committee of the Asociación Latinoamericana de Ciencia Política (ALACIP) 2002-2008. He has more than 25 years of experience in Latin American Studies with field studies and research projects in various countries (especially Argentina, Chile, Paraguay, Uruguay). His main research topics focus on democratization, human rights, political institutions (parliaments), international relations, globalization and regional integration, regional powers and regional orders.

Etel Solingen is Professor of Political Science at the University of California Irvine and former chair of the Steering Committee of the University of California’s Institute on Global Conflict and Cooperation (2004-2008). Her most recent book Nuclear Logics: Contrasting Paths in East Asia and the Middle East (Princeton University Press 2007) is the recipient of the 2008 Woodrow Wilson Foundation Award for the best book on government, politics, or international affairs by the American Political Science Association, and of the 2008 APSA’s Robert Jervis and Paul Schroeder Award for the Best Book on International History and Politics. Professor Solingen was Vice-President of the International Studies Association, President of the International Political Economy Section of ISA, and the recipient of a MacArthur Foundation Research and Writing Award on Peace and International Cooperation, a Social Science Research Council-Mac Arthur Foundation Fellowship on Peace and Security in a Changing World, a Japan Foundation/SSRC Abe Fellowship, a Center for Global Partnership fellowship, and Carnegie Corporation, USIP, Sloan Foundation, Columbia Foundation and other grants. She is also the author of Regional Orders at Century’s Dawn: Global and Domestic Influences on Grand Strategy (Princeton

Matias Spektor coordinates the Center for the Study of International Relations at Fundação Getulio Vargas (FGV), where he is an assistant professor in International Relations. His first book is entitled Henry Kissinger and Brazil (in Portuguese, Zahar, 2009). His main current research projects are a history of emerging countries in international society and a study of US-Brazil relations since the end of the Cold War. Matias also manages the one-year professional graduate degree in IR at FGV, and an oral history program on the Foreign Relations of Brazil since the End of the Cold War. He is managing editor with FGV Press for a new pocket series in IR. Previously Matias worked as an official for the United Nations and as a consultant for the Tavistock Institute in London. He earned his doctorate from the University of Oxford in 2007. For his publications and a detailed description of his research activities, see www.fgv.br/cpdoc.